PERSONAL AND SOCIETY.

Social Manners and Customs Discussed. The Ben-Hur performances, on Tuesday and Wednesday, were as much society events as anything that has been given for many a day, and the last half of the week has been given up to teas, receptions, and informal gatherings. Each has been in honor of some visitor, of which there are a large number. These companies have lacked formality, except in a few instances, now that the formal society season is over. Those who entertain endeavor to gather congenial guests and give them as enjoyable an afternoon or evening as possible. Cards, music, games and dancing are sometimes the pastime of one evening, so that those who like one can indulge in it, and those who like all can do all if the evening is long enough. Social gayeties are something a third all music, with a week now and then when there is a little of each. Thimble parties when there is a little of each. Thimble parties are generally parties without thimbles. The work, if brought, is seldom touched, and coffee and gossip rule the hour. It is wonderful what a variety of topics can be discussed and dispatched at a thimble party. The invitations, if written, are generally on a card, bearing some suggestive design, and then, again, the design is not as suggestive. A set was sent out a few weeks since, each card being embellished with an embossed needle and thread. Some thought it a hook and line, others a Chinese legend or and a hook and line, others a Chinese legend or and Icelandic proverb, and but few realized what it was, so few took their work. The name should be plainly printed, so that the blind or stupid cannot be misled.

The Delsarte system has not taken the attention of Indispapolis society people yet, but many titles and towns in other States are receiving the instruction. Ladies who like a little more pin money than they now have, take the course, and then become teachers, and as the price is $10 for twelve lessons, and the fad is Delsarte, they treap a harvest. The course is the one term and in it is taught the art of elegant manners; how to walk, how to stand, how to sit, the act of sit ting, how to rise, how to shake hands, with whom and upon what occasion, how to carry the caus, parasol, fan. pocket-book, bag, handkerchief, the friendly bow, the street bow, the carriage bow, how to receive friends or strangers, at bome or abroad, how to behave upon any and all occasions, in fact mold yourself entirely upon a pattern, and make yourself as perfect as possible in every respect. Not every one can or will take the instruction, and this will keep the entire community from being too monotonous in behavior. It would look ridienmonotonous in behavior. It would look ridiculous to a bystander to watch ladies enter a party where each practiced the Delsarte, and have everyone do, say and be just like every other one. Which brings to mind a certain New Year's reception, where a gentle-man entered the parlor where some twenty ladies were assembled. He was introduced to them, and as each name was pronounced he said "Happy to meet you." The first came clear and distinct, and so for the first half dozen, but by the time the fifteenth or twentieth came it counded more like "me chew." and the ladies were nearly in conlady here to have her friends join a class large enough to have an experienced teacher come bere from Chicago to give the lessons, but she has taken the course now, and will leave the forming of a class to some one else. This city is slow to take up ideas in art in whatever form, and the probability is that the Delsarte will not be taught here, at least for the present.

A large number of ladies have been interested in the Prohibition convention, and there was an attendance among those [whose friends thought they would be the last to go. National conventions are not held here often, and they are quick to embrace the opportunity. They enjoyed the excitement, and when they thought their hurrahs would not be too conspicuous they joined in the demonstration. The scenes and speakers received their undivided attention, and their comments and criticisms were as general as of the sex who own politics. The pronounciamen-to is "I would not have missed it for anything. Why didn't you go?"

QUEER BITS OF LITIGATION.

Experience with a Confidence Shark-What It Costs to Get Ahead of a Toll-Taker.

A couple of cases came up in the Suprem Court last week in which a very ordinary principle of law was involved but some extraordinary facts were connected with it. It seems that a citizen of New Castle was going along the street one day when he saw some fellow trying to work some sort of a "fake" on the crowd around him The citizen thereupon appointed himself a committee of one to investigate the proceedings, and after looking into the matter a short time concluded to have the individual who was preying upon his fellow-townsmen arrested. So he went to the 'squire's office, filed an affidavit, had a warrant issued for the man's arrest, and himself appointed as a special constable to take this enemy of the people in charge, and, if necessary, deposit proper defense or put up a sufficient sum to secure his appearance for trial at the proper time. The man was confronted with the warrant, charged with practicing upon the unsuspecting people things that were prohibited by the great statutes of the State, and without ceremon; started in the direction of the justice's court He went along with his captor meekly and unresistingly for some distance, until the two came near a pit, or large hole in the ground, in the very streets of the city of New Castle. When near that he seized the citizen who had him under arrest, and, without notice or apology, threw him bodily into the bole, and while the fidence man, but not the end of the story, for the citizen-constable sued the town of New Castle for damages for having such a big hole in the street whereby it was possible for him to be thrown into it and thereby injured. The case came up to the Supreme Court, and was last week decided. The court held that the town was not liable, but that the man who threw him into the hole was-if he could get him The other case was from the Howard Circuit Court, and the facts were these: Several fellows living near Kokomo were going home one night, after having been to town "celebrating" all day, and on their way they were compelled to pars through a toll-gate. When they came near it they whipped up their horses and gave every in-dication to the gate-keeper that they were going to try to run through without paying. So he lowered the bar, but raised it again as the team came up, thinking that everything was all right. The driver, however, as the horses' heads got under the pole, his the team a lick with the and the horses went dashing right through. The gate-keeper, however, was equal to the emergency and brought the pole down with a vim, striking the rig just behind the horses and sweeping the whole crowd in the wagon off into the road like cobs off a plank. For this act on the part of its officers the gravel-road company was sued for damages and the case brought up to the Supreme Court for its final decision. That body held that the company was not liable, or, in other words, said that if a man went "celebrating" and tried to officions citizen was in there or getting out, the prisoner succeeded in making good his escape.

That was the last of the case against the con that a big lawsuit can spring out of a very small for natural gas and the Citizens' Street-railway Company for the facilities of transit it can offer. They proposed to the Trust to donate to it the cost of one year's fuel supply for the whole town if it would furnish them with gas This would amount to about $9,000. It was a proposition similar to that made by Weodruff Place, but the Trust directors were not inclined to accept it. However, it agreed to lay mains and supply gas to the town for $10,000. The people then offered instead of that to take $7,000 in stock of the company. This also was considered unfavorably by the Trust, After this the people referred its proposition to

A Little Boy Killed. Louis Heim, six years of age, was instantly killed by being run over by a street-car in from? of No. 62 Massachusetts avenue, about 8:20 o'clock last night. His mother, who lives at No. 321 Davidson street, has a stand in the East Market, and last evening brought the little boy to that place with her. He and a boy about his age, Louis Geesking, left the market-place and wandered around the exceets in the neighbor. hood. As they were crossing Massachus avenue little Heim slipped and fell on the st railroad track in front of one of the cars, which passed over his neck.
